SUMMARY

The purpose of this study was to evaluate the implementation of conferencing as a restorative policing practice. Family group conferencing is considered an important new development in restorative justice practice as a means of dealing more effectively with young first-time offenders by diverting them from court and involving their extended families and victims in conferences to address their wrongdoing. Cases deemed eligible for the study were property crimes including retail and other thefts, criminal mischief and trespass, and violent crimes including threats, harassment, disorderly conduct, and simple assaults. A total of 140 property crime cases and 75 violent crime cases were selected for the experiment, with two-thirds of each type randomly assigned to a diversionary conference (treatment group) and one-third of each type assigned to formal adjudication (control group). Participation in the conference was voluntary. If either party declined or if the offender did not admit responsibility for the offense, the case was processed through normal criminal justice channels. Those cases constituted a second treatment group (decline group). The Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, Police Department and the Community Service Foundation conducted a two-year study on the effectiveness of police-based family group conferencing. Beginning on November 1, 1995, 64 conferences were conducted for the study. Approximately two weeks after their cases were disposed, victims, offenders, and offenders' parents in the three experimental groups (control, conference, decline) were surveyed by mail, in-person interviews, or telephone interviews. Those who participated in conferences (Parts 4, 6, and 8) received a different questionnaire than those whose cases went through formal adjudication (Parts 5, 7, and 9), with similar questions to allow for comparison and some questions particular to the type of processing used on their case. Disposition data on cases were collected from five district magistrates in Bethlehem from January 1, 1993, to September 12, 1997. Data on recidivism and outcomes of the control and decline group cases were obtained from (1) the Bethlehem Police Department arrest database (Part 1) and (2) a database of records from the five district magistrates serving Bethlehem, drawn from a statewide magistrate court database compiled by the Administrative Office of Pennsylvania Courts (Part 2). An attitudinal and work environment survey was administered to the Bethlehem Police Department on two occasions, just before the conferencing program commenced (pre-test) and eighteen months later (post-test) (Part 3). Part 1 variables include offender age, year of offense, charge code, amounts of fine and payments, crime type, offender crime category, and disposition. Part 2 collected disposition data on cases in the study and officers' observations on the conferences. Demographic variables include offender's age at current arrest, ethnicity, and gender. Other variables include type of charge, arrest, disposition, sentence, and recidivism; reason not conferenced; current recorded charge class; amounts of total fines; hours of community service; and conditions of sentence. Part 3 collected information on police attitudes and work environment before and after the conferencing program. Variables on organizational issues include ratings on communication, morale, co-workers, supervision, administration, amenities, equipment, and promotions. Variables on operational issues include ratings on danger, victims, frustration, external activities, complaints, workload, and driving. In Parts 4 to 9, researchers asked offenders, parents of offenders, and victims about their perceptions of how their cases were handled by the justice system and the fairness of the process, their attitudes and beliefs about the justice system, and their attitudes toward the victim and offender. Variables include whether the respondent was satisfied with the way the justice system handled the case, if the offender was held accountable for the offense, if meeting with the victim was helpful, if the respondent was surprised by anything in the conference, if the respondent told the victim/offender how he/she felt, if there was an opportunity to reach an agreement acceptable to all, if the offender/parents apologized, if the victim/parents had a better opinion of the offender after the conference, what the respondent's attitude toward the conference was, if the respondent would recommend a conference to others, if the offender was pressured to do all the talking, if the offender was treated with respect, if victim participation was insincere, if the respondent had a better understanding of how the victim was affected, if the victim only wanted to be paid back, and if conferences were responsive to needs.

PURPOSE OF THE STUDY

Family group conferencing is considered an important new development in restorative justice practice as a means of dealing more effectively with young first-time offenders by diverting them from court and involving their extended families and victims in conferences to address their wrongdoing. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the implementation of conferencing as a restorative policing practice. This project was designed to answer six programmatic questions about police-based conferencing as it was being applied in the United States: (1) Can typical American police officers conduct conferences consistent with due process and restorative justice principles? (2) Does involvement in conferencing transform police attitudes, organizational culture, and role perceptions? (3) Does conferencing produce conflict-reducing outcomes by helping to solve ongoing problems and reduce recidivism? (4) Will victims, offenders, and the community accept a police-based restorative justice response? (5) Does the introduction of diversionary conferencing alter the case processing of juvenile offenders (e.g., net-widening)? (6) How does police-based conferencing compare to the existing system and to other restorative justice practices?

METHODS

STUDY DESIGN

The Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, Police Department and the Community Service Foundation conducted a two-year study on the effectiveness of police-based family group conferencing. Beginning on November 1, 1995, 64 conferences were conducted for the study. Twenty Bethlehem police officers were trained in facilitating family group conferences, which involved following a scripted protocol, except when participants digressed from the focus of the conference. The script began with a preamble that explained the purpose of the conference and informed the offenders of their due process rights. The process then proceeded with the facilitator asking a series of open-ended questions of the offender, the victim, the victim's supporters, the offender's supporters, and the arresting officer, if present. In the agreement phase, all of the participants, beginning with victims, talked about what they would like to see done to address the harm. Solutions were not imposed by the police facilitator but resulted from the dynamic interaction of participants. When an agreement was reached, with offenders concurring, the conference was over. Then the facilitator provided refreshments and allowed some time for informal socializing while writing up the agreement for the participants to sign. Victims, offenders, and the offenders' parents in the three experimental groups (control, conference, decline) were surveyed by mail, in-person interviews, or telephone interviews approximately two weeks after their cases were disposed. Those who participated in conferences (Parts 4, 6, and 8) received a different questionnaire than those whose cases went through formal adjudication (Parts 5, 7, and 9), with similar questions to allow for comparison and some questions particular to the type of processing used on their case. Data on recidivism and outcomes of control and decline group cases were obtained from (1) the Bethlehem Police Department arrest database (Part 1) and (2) a database of records from the five district magistrates serving Bethlehem, drawn from a statewide magistrate court database compiled by the Administrative Office of Pennsylvania Courts (Part 2). An attitudinal and work environment survey was administered to the Bethlehem Police Department on two occasions, just before the conferencing program commenced (pre-test) and eighteen months later (post-test) (Part 3).

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

Data for Parts 1 and 2 were obtained from administrative records. Data for Parts 3 to 9 were obtained through personal and telephone interviews and mail-back questionnaires.

SAMPLE

The study initially defined a case as a criminal incident, and each case could involve multiple offenders and/or multiple victims. Cases deemed eligible for the study were property crimes including retail and other thefts, criminal mischief and trespass, and violent crimes including threats, harassment, disorderly conduct, and simple assaults. A total of 140 property crime cases and 75 violent crime cases were selected for the experiment, with two-thirds of each type randomly assigned to a diversionary conference (treatment group) and one-third of each type assigned to formal adjudication (control group). Offenders who previously had been involved with the juvenile probation system were excluded from the study, as were felonies, drug/alcohol crimes, sex offenses, weapons offenses, and cases in which there was no direct victim. When arranging a conference, facilitating police officers contacted both the offender and the victim to explain the conferencing process and to request their participation. Participation in the conference was voluntary. If either party declined or if the offender did not admit responsibility for the offense, the case was processed through normal criminal justice channels. Those cases constituted a second treatment group (decline group). The 215 criminal incidents included in the study involved the arrest of 292 juveniles and the victimization of 217 victims: 85 individuals, 107 retail stores, and 25 schools.

PRESENCE OF COMMON SCALES

Several Likert-type scales were used.

UNIT OF OBSERVATION

Individuals.

EXTENT OF PROCESSING

ICPSR created a codebook and SAS and SPSS data definition statements for this collection. Checks for undocumented codes were performed by ICPSR, and missing data codes were standardized. ICPSR also reformatted the data and documentation and converted hardcopy documentation to machine-readable form.

EXTENT OF COLLECTION

This data collection consists of nine data files with a user guide, codebook, and data collection instruments in one PDF file, and SAS and SPSS data definition statements.

DATA COLLECTION NOTES

A user guide, a codebook, and data collection instruments are provided as a Portable Document Format (PDF) file. The PDF file format was developed by Adobe Systems Incorporated and can be accessed using PDF reader software, such as the Adobe Acrobat Reader. Information on how to obtain a copy of the Acrobat Reader is provided on the ICPSR Website.

ICPSR CODEBOOK NOTES

1. ICPSR recoded system missing to 9-series and labeled these "Blank."
2. The variables DOB, OFDT, FLDT, and ODDT in Part 1, and OFFDATE, OFDT, ADATE, DOB, ZIP, and DDATE in Part 2 were blanked by ICPSR for confidentiality purposes.
3. ICPSR was unable to verify value labels for some codes in the data files. Undocumented values are labeled "Undoc code."
4. Case selection number can be linked across all files. This allows for comparison of those selected in the study to the universe of delinquents disposed and allows for matching cases across participant survey files.
5. Part 3 contains several scale/rating variables. These variables were computed from original variables, and were part of the researchers' analysis routine, rather than the data collection. Users are encouraged to refer to the Final Report for information on scale construction. The SPSS compute statements used to create these variables are provided in Appendix I.

Appendix I:

Original Creation Syntax for Scale/Rating Variables

1. Variables named "R_..." simply reversed the coding of the negatively worded survey questions:

COMPUTE R_SVC1 = 6-SERVICE1 .
COMPUTE R_BSVC2 = 6-BSERVIC2 .
COMPUTE R_SOCL = 6-SOCIAL .
COMPUTE R_BSOCL = 6-BSOCIAL .
COMPUTE R_ASSLTE = 6-ASSAULTE .
COMPUTE R_BASSLT = 6-BASSAULT .
COMPUTE R_RSPCT = 6-RESPECT .
COMPUTE R_BRSPCT = 6-BRESPECT .
COMPUTE R_DEDLY = 6-DEADLY .
COMPUTE R_BDEDLY = 6-BDEADLY .

2. The following scale variables were created for the analysis after factor and reliability analyses were complete. Scales were additive, without weights, and normed to maintain comparable ranges:

COMPUTE ascale = (supreme + probable + restrict + powers)/4 .
COMPUTE sscale = (nuisance + disputes + service2)/3 .
COMPUTE hscale = (public + children + complai2 + motorist)/4 .

Police Attitudes Scales and Items

Crime Control Orientation

(strongly disagree—disagree—no opinion—agree—strongly agree)

- If police officers in high crime areas had fewer restrictions on their use of force, many of the serious crime problems in those neighborhoods would be greatly reduced.
- Police officers would be more effective if they didn't have to worry about "probable cause" requirements for searching citizens.
- Police officers must sometimes use unethical means to accomplish enforcement of the law.
- Many of the decisions by the Supreme Court interfere with the ability of police to fight crime.
- Sometimes police are justified using "questionable practices" to achieve good ends.

Service Orientation

(strongly disagree—disagree—no opinion—agree—strongly agree)

Police officers should assist citizens who are locked out of their cars.

- Police should assist sick or injured persons.
- Police should handle public nuisance problems.
- If police officers act in a service capacity, this detracts from their ability to fight crime.
- Policing should be seen as service organization.
- Police officers should not have to handle calls that involve social or personal problems where no crime is involved.

Perception of Community Support

(strongly disagree—disagree—no opinion—agree—strongly agree)

- The likelihood of a police officer being physically assaulted in Bethlehem is very high.
- Most of the time the media treat police fairly.
- Most people in Bethlehem lack the appropriate level of respect for police.
- Most young people in Bethlehem respect police officers.

Perception of Community Cooperation

(1-100%)

- Percent of citizens in Bethlehem willing to call the police if they see something suspicious.
- Percent of citizens in Bethlehem willing to press charges in minor crimes.
- Percent of citizens in Bethlehem willing to press charges in serious crimes.
- Percent of citizens in Bethlehem willing to report a crime to police if they are victimized.

Belief in Police Discretion

(strongly disagree—disagree—no opinion—agree—strongly agree)

- Police officers should be able to decide whether or not to enforce laws.
- Patrol officers on the street are more effective if they are able to decide on their own when to enforce particular laws.

Perception of Criminal Justice System Support

(very poor—inadequate—adequate—good—outstanding)

- How would you rate the support of the local courts for your police department?
- How would you rate the cooperation of the Lehigh prosecutor's office with your department?
- How would you rate the cooperation of the Northampton prosecutor's office with your department?

Belief in the Quality of Police Services

(very poor—inadequate—adequate—good—outstanding)

- How would you rate the quality of police services provided by your police department?
- How would the residents rate the quality of police services provided by your police department?

Orientation Toward Force

(strongly disagree—disagree—no opinion—agree—strongly agree)

- Police officers should be allowed to use chokeholds.
- Police officers should only be able to use deadly force when someone's life is in danger.
- When a police officer is accused of using too much force, only other police officers are qualified to judge.
- Police officers should be allowed to use stun guns.

Orientation Toward Police Solidarity

(strongly disagree—disagree—no opinion—agree—strongly agree)

- I would report a fellow officer for violating a citizen's civil rights.
- I would report a fellow officer for using unnecessary force (e.g. hitting, kicking, punching) when making an arrest.
- I would arrest a fellow officer for driving while intoxicated.
- I would give a fellow officer a speeding ticket.
