SUMMARY

This data collection effort examined the influence of drug use on three key aspects of offenders' criminal careers in violence: participation, frequency of offending, and termination rate. A random sample of arrestees was taken from those arrested in Washington, DC, during the period July 1, 1985, to June 6, 1986. The sample was stratified to overrepresent groups other than Black males. Drug use was determined by urinalysis results at the time of arrest, as contrasted with previous studies that relied on self-reports of drug use. The research addresses the following questions: (1) Does drug use have an influence on participation in violent criminal activity? (2) Does drug use influence the frequency of violent offending? (3) Is there a difference in the types and rates of violent offending between drug-using offenders who use stimulants and those who use depressants? Variables regarding arrests include date of arrest, drug test result, charges filed, disposition date, disposition type, and sentence length imposed. Demographic variables include race, sex, birthdate, and place of birth.

KEY WORDS

Drug use, urinalysis, violent crimes

PURPOSE OF THE STUDY

The study was conducted to examine the relationship between drug use and violent criminal behaviors. The research addresses the following questions: (1) Does drug use have an influence on participation in violent criminal activity? (2) Does drug use influence the frequency of offending for violent crimes? (3) Is there a difference in the types and rates of violent offending between drug-using offenders who use stimulants and those who use depressants? This research may impact criminal justice decisions by delineating the role of drug use in different aspects of violent offending. The research suggests that drug use may be an aggravating factor among drug-using violent offenders who commit violent crimes at higher frequencies and over more extended time periods than do nonusing violent offenders.

METHODS

STUDY DESIGN

Longitudinal arrest data for a sample of arrestees were collected to characterize the violent offending patterns of drug users and nonusers. The sample included adults arrested in Washington, DC, on any charge from July 1, 1985, to June 30, 1986. Data were collected from case files maintained by the Washington, DC, Pretrial Services Agency for 1,368 arrestees and 7,117 arrests. Previous and subsequent arrests of the same individual were linked together to form an arrest history. Arrest histories date back to 1943 and continue through 1990. A major emphasis of the study was to refine measures of offending in order to better distinguish different aspects of violent offending by drug users and nonusers. Offending by drug users and nonusers, as determined by outcomes of urinalysis at the time of arrest, was characterized in terms of several distinct aspects of individual offending, particularly: (1) participation in violence estimated from the fraction of arrestees with any arrests for violent offenses, (2) frequency of violence reflected in the annual rate of violent criminal activity by these active offenders, and (3) termination rates of ending involvement in violent activities.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

Data for the study were obtained from the Washington, DC, Pretrial Services Agency.

SAMPLE

The data were compiled from computerized case files of adult arrestees maintained by the Washington, DC, Pretrial Services Agency. The sample of arrestees was drawn from adults arrested on any charge in the District of Columbia during the one-year period from July 1, 1985, to June 30, 1986. The sample was stratified to increase representation of demographic groups other than Black males, who represented 73 percent of the total population of adult arrestees in Washington, DC, during the sampling period. In addition to oversampling whites and females, arrestees with urine tests and those with at least two prior arrests were also oversampled to increase the yield of offenders who had urine test results that could be used to characterize their drug use. A total of 1,368 individuals and 7,117 arrests make up the sample. Approximately 18,000 adults were arrested during the sampling period.

RESPONSE RATES

Not applicable.

SUMMARY OF CONTENTS

DESCRIPTION OF VARIABLES

The data are contained in three different record types. Record type 1 contains identifying information that remains constant over an individual's lifetime (e.g., race, sex, birthdate, place of birth). Each individual has one record type 1. Record type 2 contains personal information of a changing nature at each arrest (e.g., marital status, employment, substance abuse information, probation and parole information). There is a record type 2 for each arrest. Consequently, each record type 1 has at least one corresponding record type 2. Record type 3 contains arrest and court information for each arrest (e.g., charges, warrant information, case disposition, and sentencing). Each record type 2 has one, and only one, corresponding record type 3.

PRESENCE OF COMMON SCALES

None.

UNIT OF OBSERVATION

The units of observation are individual offenders and arrests. Since the data file is hierarchical, the unit of observation is dependent upon how the records are read from the data file.

EXTENT OF PROCESSING

ICPSR produced a codebook and generated SAS and SPSS data definition statements for this collection. ICPSR also standardized missing data codes and checked for undocumented codes.

EXTENT OF COLLECTION

The data collection contains one hierarchical data file, a machine-readable codebook and user guide, and SAS and SPSS data definition statements.

DATA COLLECTION NOTES

The dataset is hierarchical and contains three record types. Record type 1, comprised of 13 variables and 1,368 records, contains stable personal information. Each unique individual represented in the data has a single record type 1. Record type 2, comprised of 49 variables and 7,117 records, contains changing personal information at the time of arrest. Record type 3, comprised of 78 variables and 7,117 records, contains arrest and court information. Each occurrence of record type 1 has at least one associated record type 2. Each occurrence of record type 2 has exactly one associated record type 3.

DISKETTE USER INFORMATION

The file sizes for the diskette version of this study are listed below. The diskette contains 6 files requiring a total of approximately 3.3 megabytes of disk space. Instructions for working with compressed files are listed below.

Uncompressing Files

Files with the .EXE extension are PKWARE Self-Extracting Compressed files. These files can be uncompressed by following the example below. Files without the .EXE extension are ASCII text files and can be read in their current form.

Example of uncompressing a compressed file into an ASCII file (using file DA6254P1.EXE):

- (1) attach to the drive/path where you wish to locate the uncompressed file, e.g., hard disk or C drive
- (2) place the diskette containing file DA6254P1.EXE into disk drive A
- (3) then type: A:DA6254P1 and press ENTER. This will access the self-executing file called DA6254P1.EXE. An uncompressed file called, DA6254.P1, will be produced and reside on your C drive.

CODEBOOK NOTES

RECORD TYPES AND IDENTIFYING VARIABLES

The data are contained in a hierarchical file. The unit of analysis varies with the record type(s) that are read from the data file. There are three record types.

Record type 1 contains identifying information for a person which remains constant over his / her lifetime (e.g., race, sex, birth date, place of birth). Each individual has one record type 1.

Record type 2 contains personal information at each arrest (e.g., marital status, employment, substance abuse information, probation and parole information). There is a record type 2 for each arrest. Consequently, each record type 1 has at least one corresponding record type 2.

Record type 3 contains arrest and court information for each arrest (e.g., charges, warrant information, case disposition, and sentencing). Each record type 2 has one, and only one, corresponding record type 3.

Record types 2 and 3 contain information for individual arrests. The CASEID variable identifies separate arrests and is unique on every record 2-3 pair. All arrests for the same person will have identical POLID and BAILID variables, but distinct CASEIDS.

Record Type	# Of Records
1	1,368
2	7,117
3	7,117
	-----
Total records	15,602

CONFIDENTIALITY

The Principal Investigator provided these notes regarding variables with potential confidentiality issues.

SENSITIVE IDENTIFICATION VARIABLES: Agency ID's were scrambled with the same new ID used for all records of the same person. Links of multiple offenders for the same original case ID and docket number were not preserved in the sanitized file. Some variables were suppressed entirely in public release data.

SENSITIVE DATE VARIABLES: Birthdates were recoded as 00-00-00 and all other dates were transformed to the number of months-days-years since the person's birthdate. Original dates earlier than 01-01-10 or dates that preceded the person's birthdate were coding errors and have been recoded here to 00-00-00. Recoded years less than 16 (which indicate arrest or processing as a juvenile) are likely to be date coding errors since juvenile records were not included in the data. Such errors are especially likely when the recoded year is 10 or under.
